

BloomAgain NJ During the Covid-19 Crisis

This summer BloomAgain assisted several women working in healthcare who were impacted by the Covid-19 Crisis. Since it is expected that women will be disproportionately affected by the pandemic, and that it will push many more people into poverty, our mission is more critical than ever.

In August, BloomAgain was able to assist Alisa, a single mom, whose son suffers from Grave's Disease. Her son's frequent hospitalizations and medical visits have always been difficult to balance with her job at a doctor's office. When the pandemic further reduced her hours and income, Alisa turned to BloomAgain. Our charity was able to help Alisa with her car payments and other bills until she could fully return to work.

Did You Know?

According to the United Nations, the shock to our society and economy from COVID-19 underscores our reliance on women both on the front line and at home, while simultaneously exposing structural inequalities across every sphere. In times of crisis, when resources are strained, women and girls face disproportionate impacts with far reaching consequences.

"It's because of organizations like BloomAgain and the people that contribute to them, that people like us have hope. You helped my mother and I when we were both suffering from many health issues. You truly could never understand the appreciation we have for BloomAgain and all those who have made this possible. It has restored our faith. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts. . ."

BloomAgain also connected with Kristina, a patient care assistant, and her mother, Jo Ann. They received a grant from BloomAgain and sent this lovely letter.
